

Ben goes to Hollywood

by Nicole Butler

Recently, 10 year old filmmaker, Ben Foster took off for Hollywood. He had the opportunity to be in a showcase presented by Kemet Productions. Ben took a portion of his script to shoot a few scenes for one of his upcoming films.

While out in Hollywood, he had the chance to go to the NAACP Awards, where he met Spike Lee, Cedric The Entertainer, Omar Epps, Steve Harvey, Tyra Banks, Halle Berry and many others.

Recently Ben has worked on two new films that will be featured in the film festival this year. On Saturday, May 3, he will be featured as the youngest filmmaker to have his film shown in a theater in Townson, Maryland during a Black Filmmakers Showcase. He has also been nominated as a young filmmaker in the African-American Hall of Fame for being an outstanding youth.

Ben was recently highlighted on NBC 10, and interviewed by Steve Leavy. He is making his way and taking a stand to help young people make the right decisions in life through his films.

For information and future auditions, e-mail: voicesofouryouth@yahoo.com

Friday, May 2, 2003

Volume 43 - Number 13

SCOOP

USA